

*What kinds of facts can students gather about themselves?

LISTS OF:

- favorite colors
- song playlists
- classes taken
- childhood classmates
- odometer reading
- shoes in your closet
- items in your drawer
- # of visits to Disneyland
- foods you hate
- foods you love
- facts & truths endemic to YOU

The more grounded and factually-based your data is, the more meaningful and accurate the end result will be. Consider facts about yourself to be sacrosanct, like details given to you by a client that must be faithfully reproduced, and stay true to the material!

This artist [<http://feltron.com/>] has taken gathering facts about himself to the extreme, publishing for many years an annual report about himself, in painstaking detail and meticulous design. Mr Felton created a website where he gathers data about other people's casual encounters with his own comings and goings, getting them to log on and answer questions about it! It's amazing enough that he goes to such lengths, but even more amazing that he gets so many folks to participate! Check it out.